

LIFER WHO ESCAPED TO SOLVE MURDER GIVES SELF UP HERE

Virginia Fugitive Ends Vain
Effort to Clear Up Killing
He Cannot Remember.

"You're probably looking for me," said a clean cut, handsome man of thirty-eight to Lieut. George Leeson at Police Headquarters this morning. "My name is James McDonald and I am a fugitive from the Lawton Prison in Virginia, where I was serving a life term for murder."

The Lieutenant found in the files a communication from Chief of Police Pullman of Washington, D. C., asking the New York Department to apprehend James McDonald. The prisoner was locked up and the Washington authorities were notified.

"My name is not McDonald," said the fugitive to an Evening World reporter. "The authorities don't know it and never will. I was a successful business man in Washington in 1910. One night I was one of a number of guests at a dinner party where there was considerable drinking. A woman was shot and killed and everybody got away but me."

"I refused to tell the names of the rest of the party. I do not know whether I shot the woman or not. My mind is a blank to almost everything that happened. There was a wealthy man in the party whom I considered my friend. I mentioned his name only to my lawyer, who tried to get a trace of him and failed."

"I was convicted and sentenced to prison in Atlanta for life. At the prison I was put in charge of the Berrillon system and made such good progress with it that when the Lawton Penitentiary was opened last October I was transferred to take charge there. I received a letter telling me that the man I sought was in New York."

"I was not guarded at Lawton, and to get away from there was easy. I came to New York, found the man my correspondent had discovered and learned that he was the wrong man. That ended my quest, so I am ready to return to prison."

"It was pretty hard to come here for nothing. My wife and daughter are here, but I did not go near them and I am going back without their knowing of my whereabouts."

HAS A SOCIALIST CORONER.

Fishers Island, Elects Lewin, but

He May Not Take Job.

Nicholas Lewin, who was elected Coroner of Fishers Island Tuesday, is the first Socialist elected in Suffolk County to any office.

He obtained office through the death of Charles W. Hedge, who was named by both Democrats and Republicans on Sept. 13. They did not know he had died on Aug. 9. They learned of his death too late to substitute another name.

As the office pays nothing it is not likely Mr. Lewin will qualify. Fishers Island is occupied by the army.
